8: Kennett G-5 (ca. 1921) 1925 MT9 Libyan Bedouin MT9

682 body had been dragged. He followed the footsteps of the 674 son as far as the cistern, where he again saw a tiny spot of fresh blood on one of the stones. From that point donkey-tracks led straight to the son's tent.

By nightfall the son was securely lodged in the police post; and local public opinion was seething with fury, firstly at such a dastardly deed committed presumably for the sake of the old man's money, and secondly because it reflected untold discredit on the rest of the tribe. The murderer, who was a big powerful man of about thirty standing nearly six feet in height, lay in prison awaiting trial. After a few days he was admitted to hospital, where he completely collapsed and died of fright a fortnight later.

• [203] Rumours then began to spread that possibly the murderer had only acted in accordance with the wishes of his brothers, who were all conspiring to get rid of the old man, in order that they might share out his possessions. This could not be proved, and appeared unlikely from the [626] evidence. However, public feeling against the whole family ran so high that it was feared that more horrors might follow; but although no open action was taken against the family, no opportunity was missed of having a dig at them in some way or another.

682 A very wealthy sheep merchant, who was a distant
674 connection of the family, and heartily ashamed of them,
691 brought an action for debt against one of the murderer's
626 brothers. He produced an I.O.U. for £2 dated twelve
686 years before and signed by the murdered man, claiming
[672] (according to custom) that the son now in court as defendant had inherited his father's liabilities together with his assets.

This sheep merchant was known personally to the writer, who was also aware that a month previously he had made a profit of £900 on a very clever bit of dealing in the West. The collection, after an interval of twelve years, of this paltry debt of £2, owing from the deceased father
